Captioning in Kaltura Capture

Automatic Speech Recognition (ASR) captioning produces a text file that is then associated with the media in Kaltura Capture. Captions are time coded to specific points in a video or audio file. ASR is 70%-90% accurate, based on various factors. That may sound like a passing grade, but it isn't. Even a recording of a speaker with perfect diction and fidelity in the recording will need some editing. Technical terms, acronyms, proper names, and both common and uncommon words may not appear as you expect them to. For example, early tests returned "Amino acids" as "I mean no acids." Also, punctuation will not be added, aside from where ACR thinks a pause is long enough to merit a period. You will need to review and edit captions for media you own. The process of using ASR for captioning has 2 components: Requesting the captions and Editing the captions.
